He was honest and honorable in his business deslines and generous to his family, friends and neighbors. He was public spirited and always ready to contribute time and money for the moral and social uplift of his community.

During the hardships of early days in Western Nebraska, he belped many a poor person or family in need without assistance. Many, now in comfortable circumstances, can look back with a feeling of gratitude to the time when "Uncle Josh," as he was affectionately called, helped them in the time of need, He was a friend to all onately called, helped them in me of need. He was a friend to ich and poor.
